

EDITORIAL

On behalf of the new Editorial Board it is my honour to welcome the Readers of the „Comparative Law Review“. Starting from this issue our journal will be published annually and it is our intention to commence the editorial process in January each year. The „CLR“ will retain its profile as an open-access and peer-reviewed academic journal which includes submissions relating to both private and public law, with a particular focus on comparative studies. We also encourage authors to submit articles and shorter notes that are interdisciplinary in nature, though the legal perspective should be considered as dominant. Proposals elaborating on how the comparative method is applied in domestic and international jurisprudence are particularly welcome.

The current issue of the „CLR“ embodies three studies, seven articles, and shorter notes as well as three case-law notes. The range of authors is truly international and so is the scope of the themes undertaken. We hope that the trend towards internationalization of contents continues. However, let me stress that the doors of the „CLR“ are open to all authors and submissions need not necessarily tackle international or European law. We welcome papers dealing with all fields of domestic law, legal theory and philosophy, as well as history of law.

Let me also take this opportunity to express my best words of thanks to the previous Editorial Board under the leadership of Prof. dr hab. Kazimierz Lubiński, who was the Editor-in-Chief of the „CLR“ from its reactivation in 2013 until 2016. I also would like to thank the Members of the Academic Board of the „CLR“ for their continuing support. Last but not least, we appreciate the excellent co-operation with Mr. Christopher Wright in ensuring that the accepted submissions abide by the proper standards of academic English.
